Summary
This research aims to build a framework of theory, the form of the diagram demonstrates the relationship of the groups of factors that impact the process of labor restructuring industries in the rural areas at present. From the theoretical frame that we will implement in detail and explain the specific group factors to turn the (Item), the proposed scale of factors to use in fact intended to serve as a basis for collecting primary data from the investigation, surveys to assess quantitatively the impact factor to the process of restructuring rural labor in Vietnam today. The research results have included a synthetic form theoretical framework diagram shows three main groups of factors including: (i) the characteristics of individual workers, (ii) community factors, (iii) family factors. In the third group is divided into 15 variables and 37 variables cluster variables used to measure the detailed information directly from employees to explain the function and specific scales recommended for the specific variables
